UT's three-semester M.Ed. in Curriculum and Instruction is designed to advance students' teaching and leadership skills. Core courses emphasize pedagogy and innovation in education, curriculum theory, educational advocacy, social dimensions of learning, instructional design, leadership and research. The program is structured around a full-time teacher's schedule, with hybrid, evening and summer course options. Students benefit from one-on-one faculty attention and advising on career development. They also gain an expanded network of colleagues and mentors. Additionally, the program provides excellent preparation for future doctoral studies.
